Why review the bylaw?

What does the bylaw cover?

- The Collection and Transportation of Waste Bylaw regulates the collection, transport and disposal of a range of mixed liquid waste by private tanker companies (there are currently four companies licensed to do this work). The waste includes dirty water from grease traps, commercial car washes and septic tanks (from businesses and some households).
- None of this waste enters the Council's wastewater system and is disposed of at the Transpacific waste treatment plant in Petone.
- The bylaw requires companies to:
  - hold a licence to collect, transport or discharge this type of waste within the Wellington district (charged at $185 annually)
  - keep records of all waste collected, transported and disposed of for three years (the Council can ask to see these records). This also covers other waste collected in the Wellington district but disposed of elsewhere.

Why reinstate the bylaw with no changes?

- No complaints or issues have been identified with how the bylaw has operated to date. There is no evidence that any of this waste enters the Council's wastewater system or is disposed of inappropriately.
- This waste is often diluted with water. While this can be problematic if not correctly handled, the waste is much less risky or toxic than other waste classified as hazardous or flammable.
- There are no recorded incidents of this waste being mishandled or else disposed of outside the Petone treatment plant.
- The requirement in the bylaw for companies to hold a licence means:
  - the Council knows which companies collect and transport the waste covered by this bylaw
  - the Council can check that waste is not disposed of inappropriately
  - the companies must comply with relevant legislation or risk their licences being revoked.
